

PUBLIC SECTOR REPUTATION INDEX: 2017

COLMAR BRUNTON

REPUTATION MATTERS FOR THE PUBLIC SECTOR. A POSITIVE REPUTATION:

1

Leads to better public engagement, and a greater willingness to accept changes in services and policy.

2

Maximises the opportunity for agencies to change behaviour; for example, to encourage us to save for retirement, insulate our homes, drive safely, or adopt healthier lifestyles.

3

Makes an organisation more resilient when things go wrong – people are more likely to view adverse events as one-off occurrences.

In 2016 Colmar Brunton launched the Public Sector Reputation Index. This was in response to an increasing demand from our clients to understand how they are perceived in relation to others.

We have repeated the research in 2017 providing public sector agencies with the opportunity to see how their reputation has changed over the past 12 months. In addition, we have expanded the list of agencies included in the survey from 31 to 39, and there are some new entrants in the top 10.

SURVEY DESIGN

The survey uses the global RepZ framework tailored to the public sector, with each agency's reputation indexed against the others (the average score is 100).

Standardised reputation attributes and advocacy asked across 39 leading public sector agencies.

2,000 online interviews conducted from 23 November to 13 December 2016.

Nationally representative sample by age, gender, household size, income, ethnicity, and region.
